

Environment and Sustainable Development

Duration     40 weeks     About this unit

The course will amongst many other things involve:

- Women's living condition
- Children's living condition
- Health
- Education
- Hunger
- Water and Sanitation
- Human Rights
- Agenda 21

We discuss the Millennium Development Goals, MDGs, as recommendations for achieving a Sustainable Development. We give you examples about how, in some African and Asian countries as well as United States of America, the steps have been taken.

The course has two main objectives:

- to provide information about the related topics,
- to inspire, challenge and encourage you to make an action.

This course demands you to work with projects connected to the issues mentioned in the course materials. You are strongly challenged to choose and work with a project of your own interest related to the subject. How can you practically get interested and involved in one or two aspects of Sustainable Development?

There are exercises included in every chapter, with the purpose of helping you to work on your personal project.

Women and Children's living condition and Sustainable Development in special focus

"To improve the living conditions for the women and the children the community has to be educated enough to realize the fact of equality of genders. To be able to implement education for all, the countries need to allocate more money to the institutions, which are managing the teaching systems. How the climate change or natural disasters affect the countries' finance?"

Is it not right that healthier children have more ability to learn? To be a healthy you need to be properly fed, and be equipped with clean water and sanitation. Not to mention how air pollution contributes to climate change, and the weather conditions promote as an example better or worse farming which leads to farmers' finance, that in its turn provides resources for better living and so on."
